Objective

Emphasis on interdisciplinary studies in the contemporary era makes it pertinent that academic researches should be scientifically endorsed. From identifying our ontological and epistemological assumptions, framing detailed write-up, focusing on research questions, selecting appropriate methodology to following appropriate ethics and methods of analysis is absolutely necessary to ensure the production of quality research work. However these rules, methods and procedures may stifle academic creativity and innovation. Hence this workshop would focus on creating a balance between rules, methods, creativity and innovation along with focusing on the current trends of research methodology, particularly in Humanities. The focal point would be to achieve quality and that would definitely further contribute to the understanding and enhancing of contemporary organisational life-skills. This workshop would also explore the potential of humanities-based research methodology engaging with the contradictions, ambiguities, power and dynamics of disability studies, gender- cultural and historical methods along with the necessary ethics to open up new possibilities for critical reflection, reconstruction, sense-making and bringing out innovative changes. It would also attempt to decolonise research methods to experience and open up new vistas.
